DESIGN PRACTICE et. al. Tidbits from the 90's: Shop worker for Art Attack, a collective of artists—some of whom were cabinet makers by day—at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. I dreaded rubbing shoulders with parole officers while fetching lunch for the group at the only deli around, which also served a correctional facility nearby. Yes, New York has changed since While imbibing Marxist theory downtown (at the Whitney ISP), a few of us took house painting gigs uptown, such as painting the penthouse of the editor of The Economist magazine Featured in Body Job, director Joanne Nerenberg's health-conscious documentary, for my daily runs along Greenpoint's toxic riverfront, as well as for drawing at my desk barefoot, feet firmly planted on the floor boards, in order to get a better line	2001–2025	Freelance graphic design practice Clients include: AIGA Baltimore, Brooklyn Industries, Children's Museum of Manhattan, Cityzen by Azin, Israel Museum in Jerusalem, Johnson & Johnson, Long Island Children's Museum, MICA, National Audubon Society, National Institutes of Health, National Parks Service, New York Police Museum, The New York Times, Port Discovery Children's Museum, The Serbian Wine Association and the US Department of State Cultural Office
	1992–2001	Brooklyn Children's Museum Positions held: exhibit builder, graphic artist, senior graphic designer By the end, I directed a staff of four full-timers and a cadre of freelancers in the production of the museum's complete graphic output, including exhibition, promotional, educational and financial graphics (i.e. annual reports)
	1991–93	Brooklyn Center for the Urban Environment (BCUE) Position: educator Designed and taught high-school programs in design and the urban environment, delivered at schools, as well as at the Center's location in Prospect Park; first dabblings in curriculum and program design
	1990–92	Brooklyn Historical Society Position: designer/educator Designed exhibitions and educational materials and led a variety of workshops
	1990–93	Bureau Positions: intern, junior designer Design studio of partners Donald Moffett and Marlene McCarty. Work included gallery collateral, print campaigns and motion graphics / title sequences. Clients spanned NYC's creative industries: art (Jay Gorney Gallery), music (Elektra) film (Swoon by Tom Kalin, Poison by Todd Haynes) and NGO-s (UNICEF). Through this work, I also assisted their after-hours gig, Gran Fury, the design arm of Act-Up, the AIDS activist group, and served as Moffett's occasional fine art studio assistant
	1986–87	Lenore Winters Studio, Washington DC High school job; Assistant in studio specializing in high-end decorative wall treatments and mount making for the museum displays of the Smithsonian Institution
